9M24 highlights

Growth in credit and income

- In 9M24, Vietnam Technological and Commercial JSB (TCB) experienced notable asset growth, with total assets increasing by 9.1% YTD to VND927.1tr (US$37.1bn), driven by a strategic restructuring of asset classes. This growth was primarily fueled by a 20.6% YTD rise in customer loans, while the investment portfolio remained relatively flat, and interbank balances saw a 13.5% YTD decline. By end-3Q24, TCB's credit growth had reached 17.5%, significantly outpacing that of 9M23 (+13.5% YTD). Within the lending portfolio, disbursement patterns exhibited considerable diversification across customer types and industry sectors, particularly with a notable recovery in personal lending during 2Q24 and 3Q24.
- Profitability also remained strong, with three consecutive quarters of over 30% YoY growth in PBT. In 3Q24, TCB's PBT reached VND7.2tr (US$914mn), a 32.3% YoY increase, driven by a 22.8% rise in NII and reductions in OPEX (-5.5% YoY) and provisioning (-16.9% YoY). For 9M24, the bank recorded cumulative PBT of VND22.8tr (US$914mn), up 36.6% YoY, achieving 84.3% of its annual target. However, profit growth in 4Q24 is likely to face pressure from weaker non-interest income and the finalized costs of terminating the contract with Manulife.

Investment points

Concerns over increasing reliance on rising interest income

- Besides the persistent concentration risk that TCB is working to curb, with some notable progress, other significant downside risks stem from limited catalysts for non-interest income. Bearish sentiment could emerge following the termination of TCB's bancassurance partnership with Manulife. However, we expect the impact to be moderate, as bancassurance revenue has already been declining in recent years, with TCB focusing on building alternative income streams, such as securities services. Another concern is service fees tied to funding import-export activities are impacted by the recent classification of related debt balances as part of credit growth (according to Circular number 21/2024/TT-NHNN issued in June 2024), requiring banks to carefully balance the economic benefits of lending versus providing these services.

Valuation

Maintain Trading Buy rating; raise target price to VND27,600

- We raise our target price for TCB by a modest VND400 (+1.5%) to VND27,600, reflecting stronger-than-expected credit growth and net interest revenue, albeit offset by a slight reduction in service income. We maintain a target forward P/B ratio of 1.4x and our Trading Buy rating.

Credit growth at TCB remains among the top-tier banks, reaching 17.5% YTD by end-3Q24, nearly double the industry growth rate of 9% for 9M24. By banking segment, the bank's growth was notably diversified across categories in 9M24, with the significant exception of investment banking. This segment saw a particular unfavored among risk-averse investors, especially given its exposure to corporate bonds, which carry higher concentration risks.

In detail, there has been a positive shift in loan structure, with the retail banking segment regaining a 0.8%p share, now comprising 40.2% of the portfolio. However, retail loan growth still lags behind business lending, which has expanded by 21.9% YTD. This slower growth is largely due to external factors, indicating the bank's need to adapt to broader economic conditions.

Looking more closely, alongside efforts to mitigate exposure to corporate bonds, the bank has also made progress in reducing concentration risks related to specific sectors, notably real estate. Sector exposure declined from 67.3% in 2023 to 64% in 3Q24. Within real estate, incremental RE trading loans for the highest disbursement, totaling VND33tr — equivalent to 18.6% YTD. Meanwhile, lending growth has shifted towards comparatively safer industries, with manufacturing up by 44.7% YTD, construction by 39.8% YTD, and agriculture and forestry by 23.7% YTD. As a result of these shifts, while some risk has been reduced, there is an accompanying moderation in returns. This trend has already been manifested partly in 9M24 data, with a 0.8%p YTD decline in yield, and further neutralization may be expected moving forward.

Source: Company data, Mirae Asset Research

Most liquidity indicators reflect stability during the period, with changes largely confined within narrow bands. Although the loan-to-deposit ratio (LDR) deviated notably from its typical range, it is approaching an optimal level, hovering above 80%, as deposits have grown modestly (+13.2% YTD) compared with loan growth of 20.8% YTD. The short-term funding to medium- and long-term lending ratio has remained around 25%, showing no significant adverse impact on interest income. Capital adequacy ratio (CAR) has recovered well, following a decline due to cash dividend payments, buoyed by robust profit growth in 9M24 (+36.6% YoY). This improvement may also be partly due to the limited increase in risky assets, particularly in exposure to real estate sector. In the near term, credit growth will be influenced not only by credit room limits, but also by the LDR, which is approaching the cap of 85%.

Source: Company data, Mirae Asset Research
Note: Gross NPL included group 2 loans

TCB maintained strong asset quality through 9M24. The non-performing loan (NPL) ratio rose modestly to 1.29% in 3Q24 (+6bps QoQ, +13bps YTD), while retaining a low level within the industry, second only to VCB among the 27 listed banks. This performance reflects TCB's high-income client base, which is less impacted by economic stagnation. Additionally, non-current loans inched up 11bps to 2.12%, with a loan-loss coverage ratio above 100% (103.5%), reflecting TCB's proactive risk management.

Source: Company data, Mirae Asset Research

The current account and savings account (CASA) ratio at TCB saw moderate fluctuations, due to muted domestic consumption and economic uncertainties, echoing trends seen in MBB and VCB, which each hover around 35%. By 3Q24, TCB's CASA reached 36.5% per financial report, or 40.5% when including "auto-earnings" deposits, a new product offering slightly lower rates than one-month deposits. Although this added a 0.6%p YTD CASA boost (accounting for 4% of deposit mix), it also brings marginally higher costs, potentially impacting the bank's NIM in the short term, alongside persistently high interbank rates.

Source: Company data, Mirae Asset Research

During challenging times, TCB's profits are rebounding, fueled mainly by lending activities and expense control. For 9M24, total operating income (TOI) rose by 28.9% YoY, driven by a 33.9% increase in lending income, while service income remained steady. Within service income, growth in settlement and securities services was offset by a decline in bancassurance, a segment that peaked in 2021–2022.

Looking forward, TCB's profitability will likely be bolstered by sustainable credit growth, supported by its high capital adequacy ratio (CAR), which stood at 15.1% in 3Q24. With rising expectations for a real estate market recovery and more flexible credit quota management by the SBV, TCB is poised to capitalize on credit demand. However, with its loan-to-deposit ratio (LDR) approaching the regulatory cap of 85%, the bank may balance growth between loans and deposits or increased investment. TCB's CAR offers room for additional lending, but aggressive LDR utilization may not be optimal long-term.

Despite the bancassurance partnership with Manulife coming to an end, this impact on TCB's earnings is anticipated to be limited, given that the bancassurance segment now represents only 7.4% of TCB's service income — down from a high of about 15%. The termination compensation of around VND1.8tr (US$720mn) will slightly dampen earnings growth in FY24, although we still project over 21% YoY growth. For FY25, growth drivers are expected to include robust NII, lower credit expenses, and normalized operating expenses following one-time compensation costs in FY24.

Source: Bloomberg, Mirae Asset Research

TCB stock has been one of the best-performing banking stocks this year. This reflects not only strong earnings, in line with expectations, but also strategic shifts at the bank. For the first time in over a decade, TCB issued cash dividends, aligning with investor expectations. The bank also reduced its investment banking focus, particularly in corporate bonds, to lower concentration risk. Although the real estate market's recovery has been slower than anticipated, TCB's developer partners are financially stable, reassuring investors. Recent foreign inflows further signal confidence, as TCB's operational metrics now appear more balanced and sustainable, with a controlled equity multiplier and moderated ROE that appeals to fundamental investors.
